With a Proven History from the Past

HISTORY

Copper clad stainless steel was introduced 40 years ago as an alternative to copper. Used for roofing, rain drainage, and flashing products in the late 1960's and early 1970's, many of these projects are still in existence today. Using copper clad stainless steel is an ideal way to reduce costs for any project that calls for copper. This exceptional product also provides high strength, low weight, good formability, low thermal expansivity, and excellent solderability. Customers really appreciate copper clad stainless steel because it reacts like pure copper, aging with a rich patina that adds beauty with every passing year.
